Key Events: How close is "close"?

The Federal Reserve is "close" to being done with rate hikes. In a highly anticipated speech, Chair Powell re-iterated progress on the three components of inflation:

- 1. Goods prices have come down quickly.
- 2. Housing costs have fallen, but slowly.

3. Non-housing services such as healthcare, food and transportation are not declining quickly enough.

He reiterated that non-housing services are more connected to labor costs than other areas of inflation.

Market review:

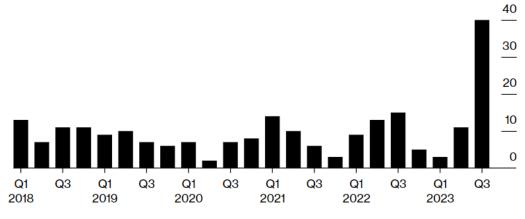

US Stocks ended the week with modest gains after see-sawing through the week. In the end, most stock and bond markets finished the week on a positive note.

Larger, more growth-oriented stocks performed best for the week, returning to the trend that has defined the year.

Outlook: Evaluating clouds on the horizon

Chair Powell's comments highlight that the labor market – the consumer - will likely suffer while the Fed brings inflation down to target. This is a large cloud on the horizon. Another, highlighted below, is the resumption of student loan payments, which has companies worried^{i}.

Chair Powell finished by saying "we are navigating by the stars under a cloudy sky". OneAscent's "stars" are values-alignment, long-term focus and diversification. These will serve us well during these cloudy times.
